Daisies as Food From the London Chronicle.

Since vegetable diet is being recommended, may we hope for the utiliza-tion of some of the nutritious plants which are now allowed to waste? Dandelion, for instance, is extensively used on the continent for salads, but is entirely neglected in England. Daisy letter leaves also are excellent in salads, and require no special preparation, and fons upon tons of nasturtium leaves run to waste every year in London gardens which ought to come to our tables.
